Dedication

This book is dedicated to all of those who help keep the charm of the Golden Age of Radio alive today — antique radio clubs, collectors, enthusiasts, and restorers; also to the many individuals who have warmly shared with us their personal memories of days sitting around the radio, listening to their favorite shows or breaking news of major historical events of the twentieth century.

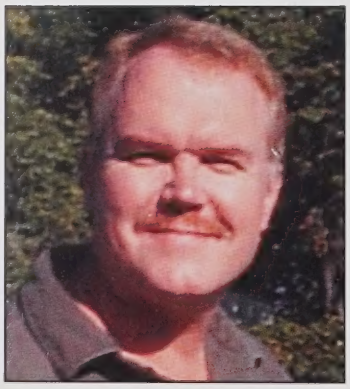
Acknowledgments

A very special thank you to those members of the Radio Daze team, Beth Lee, Phil Hazen, Bill Rindfuss, Xai Tandara, and my niece, Jessica Hauze, who helped author this book.

Endless love and gratitude to my children, Adam Plante, Michael Slusser, and Callie Slusser for the help, support, encouragement, and patience given to dear old Dad while he was working on this book.

Warmest regards and sincere appreciation to the many individuals who supported the efforts of Marty and Sue Bunis in past editions of this book.

About the Author



John Slusser has been fascinated by the world of antique radio ever since he was given his grandfather's cathedral radio in his early teens. In fact, it was his interest in restoring and listening to that radio that motivated him to pursue an education in electrical engineering. He has been involved in the computer systems and telecommunications arena for over 25 years.

About 10 years ago, John decided to renew his interest in antique radio as a casual hobby and a relaxing diversion from the high-tech world. However, it wasn't long before the hobby became an obsession! He has since accumulated a personal collection of several hundred vintage radios with a primary focus on the radios made by E.H. Scott, Stromberg-Carlson, and RCA. In the mid-1990s, he started Radio Daze, LLC in upstate New York to service and sell classic radios of the 1920s – 1950s. Today, Radio Daze is on the Internet, has expanded its offerings to include components and supplies for radio repair and restoration, and is staffed by a team of passionate antique radio enthusiasts who helped author this edition.

Previous editions of Collector's Guide to Antique Radios have always been used by the authors as their primary source for antique radio information and values. It is their passionate charter to continue to make this series the recognized antique radio information source, building upon the excellent foundation laid in prior editions by Marty and Sue Bunis.

Welcome to the World of Antique Radios

Thousands of individuals all over the world are enchanted with the hobby of antique radio. During the golden age of radio (1920s – 1950s) millions of radios were produced in the United States by hundreds of companies. Radio manufacturers such as RCA, Philco, Zenith, GE, Stromberg-Carlson, and many others were among the largest firms in the country. The radios that they built had a quality of materials and construction techniques that simply don't exist in today's consumer electronics. Although the vast majority of these radios and their manufacturers have long since vanished, many of the sets produced during the golden age of radio do still exist. To the antique radio enthusiast, nothing quite compares to finding a classic radio at a flea market, garage sale, antique shop or even in Grandpa's attic. Often, with just the right dose of tender loving care, these radios can be restored to their original warm sound and visual elegance.

Newcomers to antique radio will be pleased to find that many excellent books and reference sources are available to help them learn more about the history, technology, and restoration of vintage radio sets. Antique radio organizations and clubs, such as the Antique Wireless Association (AWA) based in Bloomfield, New York, can be a great source of help and guidance.

Components and supplies required for antique radio restoration remain generally available. Radios of the golden age used vacuum tubes — the predecessor of today's solid state electronics. Vacuum tubes have filaments similar to light bulbs, and they do degrade in the normal course of operation. The life of a tube is generally in inverse proportion to the amount of time the radio is in operation. However, some tubes will last for 10+ years in average use, while others may need replacement within a year or two. Although vacuum tubes are no longer in production on a broad scale, there are a few active manufacturers of specific types of tubes. More importantly for the radio enthusiast, billions of tubes were manufactured during the tube era, and most types are still available from various sources that currently serve the antique radio community. Most other electronic components necessary for radio restoration, such as capacitors and resistors, are still being manufactured. Although replacement parts originally supplied by the manufacturer are usually not available, functionally equivalent parts that can substitute for the original parts can generally be found.

Part of an antique radio's charm can be its original, albeit sometimes used, look. As with other antiques, complete refinishing of a radio should only be done when absolutely necessary. Often what appears to be a marginal finish can be brought back to a great appearance with a rub-down and spot touch-up. Many products are readily available for working on the appearance of wood, Bakelite, and plastic radios. In addition, several sources offer reproduction grille cloth, knobs, etc. to help appearance restoration.

For those not interested in doing radio restoration themselves, there are several dozen quality repair shops and individuals across the country specializing in antique radio restoration.

An important note of caution. The excitement of a novice antique radio enthusiast finding his first classic set can often yield unfortunate results. Many of the parts in a tube radio do not deteriorate with age and should last for decades to come. However, some parts do deteriorate and offer a much higher possibility of failure. If you have or find a vacuum tube radio that hasn't been used for several years or more, please note that there are several good reasons not to plug it in and "check it out." Most classic radios are not fused and therefore do not protect the radio from abnormal operating conditions. The parts in the radio that may have deteriorated can heavily stress or ruin other good parts. If this happens, the radio may become unrepairable. The insulation on your radio power cord may also be questionable and offer both a shock and a fire hazard. Many newcomers understand that vacuum tubes need to "warm up" and often will plug in sets for many minutes, expecting a long warm-up period. Often, what they don't realize is that some of the other radio components themselves are actually "warming up" and heading toward "burning up!" The best bet is not to give in to temptation and plug in your radio only under controlled circumstances or after basic checkout and/or restoration.

About This Edition

This fifth edition of Collector's Guide to Antique Radios is the first edition written by new authors. While similar in general format to past editions and based in part upon the excellent prior work done by Marty and Sue Bunis, this edition provides a substantial amount of new information. The content and format of each radio listing have been reviewed in order to be as detail consistent as possible. The goal was to provide the radio style (console, table, etc.), year of initial market introduction, case material (wood, plastic, etc.), an identifying description, the number of knobs, types of reception (AM broadcast band, FM, etc.), the number of tubes, and the type of power utilized (AC, battery, etc.) for each listing. While every specific detail for some radios could not be determined, a great deal of research has been done to provide as much detail as possible. In addition, pricing ranges have been reviewed and updated where appropriate to reflect current market conditions.

This edition also contains additional radio listings and photographs not found in prior editions. Of particular note is the completely new section on the radios of E.H. Scott, who manufactured some of the most sophisticated, highest quality, and most expensive radios of the 1930s and 1940s. Scott radios are some of today's most highly collectible sets.

Explanation of Pricing

Pricing for vintage radios, like many other antiques and collectibles, is extremely variable and dependent on many factors. The pricing information in this book is drawn from many different sources: regional and national radio meets, flea markets, auctions, private collectors, antique radio classified ads, and the authors' real world experience. The price ranges listed represent an average of these various pricing information sources. Many prices remain reasonably consistent over time — especially for those radios of average design and/or those originally produced in reasonable volumes resulting in higher numbers remaining today. Rarer or more functionally sophisticated sets, and aesthetically unique sets, such as Deco designs, novelties or Catalins, tend to enjoy a trend of ever-increasing prices. Some radio prices have decreased somewhat over time as well.

The primary factor when considering whether an old radio is worth the price is its CONDITION. We have tried to provide pricing that reflects sets in good condition, using the following guidelines:

1. Physical condition. All knobs and pushbuttons are intact and original. Tuning dials/scales are fully readable and complete. Dial covers, escutcheons, bezels, and other trim items are intact and undamaged. Radio does not appear to have had exposure to weather or moisture and chassis shows very little or no rust or corrosion. Wooden cabinets should have intact veneer, no meaningful chips, be structurally sound, and have a finish in reasonable condition (should not require complete refinishing). Plastic cabinets should have no cracks, chips, heavy scratches or gouges. Cloth-covered, leatherette, etc. cabinets should have no rips, tears, stains or heavily worn areas.

2. Electronic condition. This is often difficult to fully determine from a visual inspection. Pricing does not assume the radio is working (see earlier caution about turning on radios of unknown operational condition). However, the radio should have all components intact, including tubes, and other sub-assemblies such as record players, etc. where applicable. Speaker(s) should be in place and have no damage. The radio should also not appear to have had obvious functional problems that might be indicated by visible signs of overheating, burn marks, component melting, etc.

Several specific factors may well support prices above those listed. Radios that have been professionally restored by skilled technicians certainly may be substantially higher in price. Proper restoration can involve a great deal of labor and investment, especially in higher tube count radios. Professional cabinet refinishing can also involve substantial expense. Occasionally a radio will be found in as-is "mint" condition — very seldom or perhaps never used — perhaps even with original packaging. Such a "mint" radio, due to its rarity, would obviously be worth more than the price listed herein. Original user manuals or other original documentation accompanying a given radio may also dictate higher pricing.

If you have a radio that you would like to sell, it is important to be realistic about its true condition. Although it is obviously quite old and may even be a family heirloom, the radio's condition will primarily dictate its value to a potential buyer.

Geographic location is also a factor in determining a fair price for an antique radio. Prices generally tend to be higher on the West Coast than the East Coast, due in part to the greater supply of sets in the East due to population distribution during the golden age of radio. Sale/purchase venue is also a factor. Antique shop and auction prices tend to be more expensive than flea markets and yard sales, etc.

Setting price guidelines for rare and/or highly collectible radios is somewhat challenging. Pricing can vary quite dramatically depending upon what might be at first perceived to be slight differences in condition. For example, Catalin radios are still some of the most highly sought radios. Yet, because there are so many factors that significantly affect the price of Catalin radios, e.g., specific color, the smallest stress cracks, heat discoloration, etc., it is impossible to establish a reasonably firm price range. Similarly, slight imperfections in the appearance of novelty radios can result in wide price swings. High-end radios, such as those of E.H. Scott, often were produced with a wide variety of cabinet types. Pricing for radios with the same basic model electronics varies dramatically depending upon the specific cabinet model. Because of these dynamics, we have indicated some prices followed by a "+," which means you should expect to pay at least this much for a set in good condition, with specific price depending on the above-mentioned variables.

Terms and Key to Descriptive Information

COMPANY ADDRESSES

We have included addresses for as many of the companies in our listings as possible. For some of the larger or more well-known companies, we have also included a brief history. The address and history information is not necessarily complete. Many radio companies, especially during the 1920s and the Great Depression, went in and out of business so fast, merged with one another so often, or moved so frequently that it is sometimes impossible to pinpoint exact addresses and complete historical background.

MODEL NUMBERS

Some model number formats for a given company can be very inconsistent and confusing. We have often found company literature and advertising to show the same model number in several different ways! For example: A model #36WG-715 might be written 36-WG-715 or 36WG715 or even 36-WG715. We have attempted to list radios in a logical sequence to help locate models quickly. However, you may need to consider some of the format variations above when looking for a specific model and try different combinations until you find the one you are looking for.

STYLE

There are many different types or styles of radios available. We have used various common descriptive terms in this guide. The following is a basic description of each:

Breadboard: An early radio with the tubes and other component parts attached to a rectangular board that usually has "breadboard" ends. Breadboard radios have no cases or covers, all parts and tubes are exposed.

Cathedral: Sometimes referred to as "beehives," cathedrals are taller than wide with a top that is usually rounded or with a rounded peak, generally thought to resemble a cathedral window in shape. The cathedral is the classic radio shape.

Chairside: A console radio with a low shape made to sit beside an armchair, usually with the controls on the top within easy reach.

Console: The console is also called a floor model. It can consist of a cabinet on legs or just a rectangular (higher than wide) case that sits directly on the floor.

Portable: A radio made to be used in the home as well as outdoors or in a location with no electricity. Most portables run on battery power, although a great many are three-way sets, using electricity or batteries.

Table: A general term used to describe many shapes and sizes of radios that are tabletop sets.

Tombstone: These are sets that are rectangular in shape, higher than they are wide and flat on top; generally they resemble the shape of a tombstone. They are sometimes called upright table models.

C: Clock-radio includes a clock as one of its design features.

N: Novelty. This is a very broad term and covers all radios that are highly collectible due to their unusual cases, whether they sport a Mickey Mouse, a Charlie McCarthy, a built-in camera, look like a baseball, a bar, a bottle or any other design where one would not expect to find a radio.

R/P: Radio/phono combination.

YEAR

We have tried to provide the correct first year of availability for most of the sets listed. However, the actual date of manufacture for a specific radio set that you may own, or are looking to purchase, may vary somewhat. Keep in mind that many radio companies overlapped models from one year to the next. In addition, popular models were often made for several years or more. Therefore the year data should be used primarily to give a general idea of the age of the radio. In some cases we have placed a "c" before the date, e.g. "c1937," to indicate that to our best knowledge the radio was introduced around or "circa" the year given.

CASE MATERIAL

Radio cases/cabinets are made from a variety of materials. We have classified most radio sets into one of the following categories:

Cloth-Covered: Many radio cabinets were designed with an underlying wood or composition material structure covered by decorative cloth of various kinds. Specific kinds of cloth designs included simulated Alligator, leather called "Leatherette," and Snakeskin.

Metal: Used to designate radio cabinets that are primarily or totally constructed of painted metal.

Luggage-style: A radio cabinet that looks very similar to a piece of luggage and was utilized for portable radio designs. Often cloth-covered in some fashion, with hinged cover/lid and handle.

Plastic: We have used the word "plastic" as a generic term to cover most, but not all, plastics. In the case of Catalin plastics, we have used the word "Catalin" specifically rather than the generic word "plastic" because of the much higher pricing structure of Catalin sets.

Repwood: A type of pressed wood popular in the 1930s and used to make various decorative items, including ornate radio cases that have a beautiful carved appearance.

Wood: We have used the word "wood" to cover a wide range of radio cases comprised of either solid wood or a combination of outer wood/paper veneers and inner wooden framework and typically finished in clear or toned lacquers. In some cases we have indicated the type or color of the wood/finish, e.g., walnut, mahogany, etc.

DESCRIPTION

In addition to the other listing items, we have attempted to include wherever possible a description of the radio's shape, placement of the dial and grille, etc. to help in identifying a specific model. Some of the following terms are frequently used in the descriptions:

"Airplane" Dial: A round dial with a pointer covering a full 360 degrees. Named for an appearance similar to aircraft gauges and instrumentation.

Bakelite: A thermosetting phenolic resin developed in the early 1900s, essentially the first "plastic." Utilized for many front panels of battery sets and the complete cabinet for many table radios until the advent of more modern plastics in the 1950s. Bakelite is molded under very high temperature and is naturally black or brown in color. Some Bakelite cases were painted in order to offer more color variety, e.g., ivory.

Dial: Battery sets (see also Power Sources) prior to 1927 – 1928, had one or more round, typically large knobs for station selection. The knobs would either have a pointer to front panel scale markings or the knobs would be marked with a scale (typically 0–100) and have an associated front panel pointer. Later sets would usually have a single tuning knob and some form of associated station/frequency indicator — also called a "dial" — such as the "airplane" or "slide rule" dials.

Escutcheon: An ornamental and/or protective plate typically around a radio dial or knobs.

Feet: Attached or molded standoffs on table radios used to maintain some space between the bottom of the radio and the table itself.

Grille: The face area of a radio cabinet, often of a decorative design, behind which the radio speaker is typically mounted. Most radios also have an associated color-coordinated cloth, the "grillecloth," mounted between the grille and the speaker.

Highboy: A floor model radio whose legs (4 to 6) typically are half or more of the total height of the case.

Lowboy: A floor model radio whose legs (4 to 6) are considerably lower than a highboy's, generally, less than half the height of the case.

Midget: A small table set, usually less than seven inches in its longest measurement.

"Movie" Dial: A dial, which features a projected image from a circular film, rotating around a bulb.

Pushbuttons: Control "buttons," typically ganged together in groups, that are operated by being pushed in rather than turned, like knobs. Pushbuttons are most often utilized to easily select specific preset radio stations. Also sometimes used to control other functions such as tone, phono, on/off, etc.

"Robot" Dial: A feature of some Zenith radios, the robot dial is really three dials in one — standard broadcast, shortwave and police/amateur. Only one dial is visible at any time and can be changed by the turn of a lever.

"Slide Rule" Dial: A rectangular dial, usually horizontal, which features a thin sliding station indicator.

Stretcher Base: A radio cabinet style, most typically a "highboy," with a framework of braces interconnecting and strengthening the cabinet's legs.

Tuning Eye: A special purpose vacuum tube mounted to be visible from the front of the radio cabinet and used to aid tuning in a station by indicating the station's signal strength. The name is derived from its typical appearance as an "eye" which opens and closes. Also sometimes called a "magic eye" or "cats-eye."

KNOBS

As an aid in identification, we have included, whenever the information was available, the number of "knobs" for a given radio. For this purpose, we consider sets with multiple functions on one common control shaft, e.g., a tuning control and a band selector, as one knob from a visual perspective. Sets with dials that are themselves knobs are included in the knob counts.

TYPES OF RECEPTION

The vast majority of radios listed were primarily designed for consumer use. We have not generally included sets that were designed for amateur radio, commercial or special purpose reception. Some of the radios listed were designed to receive multiple "bands" or frequency ranges and in some descriptions, we indicate the number of such bands for a given radio set. In general we have assigned the reception capability of a radio to one or more of the following categories:

BC: "Broadcast" — typically synonymous with the "AM" (amplitude modulation) band still in existence today. Almost all the radios listed were designed to provide BC reception. The BC frequency range varied as radio evolved, but typically covered from around 550 kilocycles or KC (now "kilohertz") to 1600 kilocycles. Radio sets in the 1930s would often extend this range to above 1700 KC to include the then-existing "police" band.

FM: "Frequency Modulation" — Both a new type of reception and frequency range that evolved just before World War II. Pre-war FM reception consumer radios were fairly rare and typically covered the range of 42-50 megacycles or MC; when known, these sets are designated as "FM1" in the listings. The FM band was moved in 1945 to its present day allocation at 88 – 108 MC and the vast majority of sets listed with frequency modulation receiving capabilities cover this frequency range.

LW: "Long Wave" — Reception in a frequency range below the BC band. Typically some segment within 100 KC to 500 KC.

SW: "Short Wave" — A general term used to indicate reception in some segment of the range from 1600 KC, just above the BC band, to 30 megacycles or MC. Often this capability would be referred to as "Foreign Broadcast" reception and many sets, primarily in the 1930s, would actually show foreign cities on the radio dial. Some radios had a separate "Police" band, covering 1700 KC and above, to allow reception of police calls. In such cases, we have designated them as "SW" as well.

NUMBER OF TUBES

The number of vacuum tubes utilized in the radio. For listing purposes we have included "tuning eyes" and ballast tubes in the totals.

POWER SOURCES

Antique radios typically utilize one or more of the following sources of operating power:

AC: "Alternating Current" — typically the standard household 110 volt, 60 cycle (hertz) power in use today. AC powered radio sets first started to appear in the latter half of the 1920s in conjunction with the development of compatible vacuum tube technology and the increasing electrification of major population centers in the United States. Early AC powered sets were actually battery sets (see below) with separate power supplies commonly referred to as "battery eliminators."

DC: "Direct Current" — Many rural/farm areas in the United States did not become "electrified" with today's standard AC power until as late as the early 1950s. Instead, electric power tended to be derived from generators, etc. that supplied DC power. A fair number of radio sets were designed to operate on DC power for use in such rural areas, and they were often referred to as "farm" sets. Many radios were ultimately designed to readily operate on either AC or DC power, including the vast majority of the table radios produced in the late 1940s through mid 1960s.

Battery: All early radio sets, until the latter half of the 1920s, required several batteries for operation: an "A" battery to power tube filaments, such as a rechargeable automobile battery, and "B" and sometimes "C" batteries for other operating power. These sets are collectively called "battery sets." Later on, radios designed to be portable also utilized different forms of batteries as one source of operating power.

PICTURES

We have tried, to the best of our ability, to photograph only sets that are as close to original as possible. There may be a few pictures included here that show radios with new finishes, or replacement parts such as knobs or grille cloth. In general, we believe such modifications do not detract from the value of the given radio set.

Keep in mind that this book is a guide, intended to guide the reader with identification and current pricing information. Because there are so many dynamic variables to consider, we recommend that you also rely upon your own judgment when making an antique radio purchase or sale decision.

We welcome your comments and constructive criticisms about this edition. We also would be interested in any suggestions or informative contributions that you might have for future editions.

ADMIRAL

Continental Radio & Television Corporation
3800 W. Cortland Street, Chicago, Illinois
Admiral Corporation, 3800 W. Cortland St., Chicago, Illinois

Admiral was founded as the Continental Radio & Television Corporation in 1934 by a group of four investors, some of whom literally sold their belongings to raise the initial capital. Growing rapidly due to the production of good merchandise at affordable prices, the company ranked #5 in sales volume by 1939. Because of quality control problems and competition from Japanese TV manufacturers, the company was forced to close its last plant in 1979.

ATWATER KENT

Atwater Kent Manufacturing Company
4703 Wissahickon Avenue,
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Atwater Kent began business manufacturing electrical items and parts for automobiles. In 1922 the Atwater Kent Manufacturing Company began to market component parts for radios and the first of their large line of breadboards. By 1924 the company produced the first of their cabinet sets. Both the Pooley Company and the Red Lion Cabinet Company were among several furniture manufacturers who made radio cabinets for Atwater Kent. From 1925 to 1927, the company sponsored the Atwater Kent Radio Hour, a popular Sunday night show of radio music. A victim of the Depression, Atwater Kent was out of business by 1936.

CROSLEY

The Precision Equipment Company, Inc.
Peebles Corner, Cincinnati, Ohio
Crosley Manufacturing Company, Cincinnati, Ohio
The Crosley Radio Corporation, Cincinnati, Ohio
Crosley Corporation, 1329 Arlington Street, Cincinnati, Ohio

The Crosley company was begun in 1921 by Powel Crosley, who believed his radio company should offer the consumer a good quality product at the lowest possible price and he called his sets the Model T's of radio. In 1923, Crosley bought out the Precision Equipment Company. The Crosley Radio Corporation enjoyed success until the late 1920s. One of the most sought-after of Crosley sets today is the Pup, a small 1 tube set made to sell for only $9.75 in 1925 and known as the Sky Terrier.

The Radio Telephone Company
49 Exchange Place, New York, New York
Deforest Radio Telephone & Telegraph Company
1415 Sedgwick Avenue, New York, New York
Deforest Radio Company
Jersey City, New Jersey

Between 1900 and the end of WW I, Lee Deforest and his various companies produced much electrical equipment for the government. By 1922, the company was fully involved in the production of radio sets for the public. After many legal entanglements, the company was sold to RCA in 1933.

FADA

Fada Radio & Electric Company
30–20 Thomson Avenue, Long Island City, New York
F.A.D. Andrea, Inc.
1581 Jerome Avenue, New York, New York

Fada was named for its founder – Frank Angelo D'Andrea. The company began business in 1920 with the production of crystal sets. Business expanded until the mid-twenties, but overproduction and internal problems took their toll and by 1932 the company had been sold and the name changed to Fada Radio & Electric Corporation. Fada continued to produce radios through the mid-1940s and is probably best known for the Fada Bullet, their ultra-streamlined Catalin radio made in the 1940s.

FEDERAL

Federal Telephone & Radio Corporation
591 Broad Street, Newark, New Jersey
Federal Telephone & Telegraph Company
Buffalo, New York
Federal Radio Corporation
(Division of the Federal Telephone Manufacturing Corp.)
Buffalo, New York

Federal Telephone & Telegraph began in 1908 with the manufacture of telephones and soon began to produce radio parts as well. The company produced its first complete radio in 1921 and began to manufacture a high quality, relatively expensive line of sets. As time went on and less complicated radios began to appear on the market, Federal's business declined and by 1929 the company had been sold.

FREED-EISEMANN

Freed Radio Corporation
200 Hudson Street, New York, New York
Freed-Eisemann Radio Corporation
255 Fourth Avenue, New York, New York

The Freed-Eisemann Radio Corporation began in 1922. Business was good for the company until 1924 when, with the onslaught of less expensive radios from the competition the company began to decline. Most of the Freed-Eisemann stock was sold to the Freshman Company in 1928 and the final blow was the stock market crash in 1929. Two later companies also formed by the Freed Brothers were The Freed Television and Radio Corporation begun in 1931 and The Freed Radio Corporation begun in 1940.

FRESHMAN

Chas. Freshman Co., Inc.
Freshman Building
240–248 West 40th Street, New York, New York

In 1922 the Charles Freshman Company was formed for the manufacture of radio parts. The popular, low-cost Freshman Masterpiece was introduced in 1924 in both kit and completed radio form. The company was plagued by quality control problems and by 1928, in spite of a merger with Freed-Eisemann, the stock market crash dealt the final blow.

GAROD

Garod Radio Corporation
70 Washington Street, Brooklyn, New York
Garod Corporation
8 West Park Street, Newark, New Jersey

The name Garod is short for the original Gardner-Rodman Corporation which manufactured crystal sets in 1921. The name was changed to the Garod Corporation in 1923 when the company began to produce radios. Due to legal and quality control problems, the original company was out of business by 1927, but the Garod name had appeared once again in radio manufacturing by 1933.

MAJESTIC

Grigsby-Grunow Company
5801 Dickens Avenue, Chicago, Illinois
Majestic Radio & Television Corporation
St. Charles, Illinois

The Grigsby-Grunow Company was formed in 1928. The company's radio sales were extraordinary due to the superiority of their speakers over that of others on the market. However, the Depression soon caught up with Grigsby-Grunow, and by 1933 the company was bankrupt. The business was re-formed into the Majestic Radio & Television Corporation which made the Majestic line and General Household Utilities which made the Grunow line until 1937.

SCOTT

E.H. Scott Radio Laboratories, Inc.
4450 Ravenswood Avenue, Chicago, Illinois

E.H. Scott was a native of New Zealand who emigrated to the United States at the end of World War I. After an initial interest in automobiles, he became fascinated with radio, writing many articles on the best performing radio circuitry of the day. In the second half of the 1920s, Scott began manufacturing radio transformers and offered a variety of high performance radio kits. In the 1930s, Scott began custom manufacturing of expensive, state-of-the-art radios, "The Stradivarius of Radio Receivers," typically featuring high tube counts, chrome plated chassis, and high fidelity audio. His motto was "The Fine Things Are Always Made By Hand." During World War II, Scott manufactured many radio receivers for the armed forces. E.H. Scott sold his interest in his company during the latter part of World War II and terminated any association with the company in 1945. Scott Radio Laboratories continued in business into the 1950s.

Scott radios are some of the most highly sought collector radios. The radios were purchased separately from the cabinets, resulting in a wide variety of possible radio and cabinet combinations. The listings below indicate values of the basic radio models themselves and then the additional value of the particular cabinet illustrated in the photos is also noted. The value of any given Scott radio in a cabinet is the total of the radio value and the cabinet value. A key value criteria is the completeness of the radio (i.e., includes all chassis and speaker as indicated) and the condition of any chrome plated chassis, with significant rust and/or pitting resulting in a serious reduction in the listed values.

SPARTON

Sparks-Withington Company
Jackson, Michigan

The Sparks-Withington Company began to manufacture radios in 1926. In the 1930s, their introduction of Deco-styled mirrored radios, along with other Deco cabinet designs by Walter Dorwin Teague, helped make the Sparton line one of the most sought after by collectors of Deco radios. The company produced one of the most expensive-to-own radios in today's collecting world — the 1936 Nocturne, a Deco, 46" round mirrored console which currently sells for over $25,000.

ZENITH

Zenith Radio Corporation
Chicago, Illinois

The Zenith company began as Chicago Radio Labs in 1918 and the name "Zenith" came from the station call letters of its founders, 9ZN. Commander Eugene McDonald built Zenith into one of the most successful and prolific of radio manufacturers. Some of the most sought after Zenith sets today are the black dial sets of the 1930s. The Zenith Stratospheres are some of the highest value collector sets. Zenith model numbers were often stamped on sets and tended to fade. Because of this fact, chassis numbers of some models are also included as an aid in determining the specific model.

This is only a partial listing of the books on antiques that are available from Collector Books. All books are well illustrated and contain current values. Most of these books are available from your local bookseller, antique dealer, or public library. If you are unable to locate certain titles in your area, you may order by mail from COLLECTOR BOOKS, P.O. Box 3009, Paducah, KY 42002-3009. Customers with Visa, Discover or MasterCard may phone in orders from 7:00–5:00 CST, Monday–Friday, Toll Free 1-800-626-5420, or online at www.collectorbooks.com. Add $3.00 for postage for the first book ordered and 50¢ for each additional book. Include item number, title, and price when ordering. Allow 14 to 21 days for delivery.

Schroeder's ANTIQUES Price Guide

...is the #1 bestselling antiques & collectibles value guide on the market today, and here's why...

- More than 450 advisors, well-known dealers, and top-notch collectors work together with our editors to bring you accurate information regarding pricing and identification.

- More than 50,000 items in over 600 categories are listed along with hundreds of sharp original photos that illustrate not only the rare and unusual, but the common, popular collectibles as well.

- Each large close-up shot shows important details clearly. Every subject is represented with histories and background information, a feature not found in any of our competitors' publications.

- Our editors keep abreast of newly developing trends, often adding several new categories a year as the need arises.

If it merits the interest of today's collector, you'll find it in Schroeder's. And you can feel confident that the information we publish is up-to-date and accurate. Our advisors thoroughly check each category to spot inconsistencies, listings that may not be entirely reflective of market dealings, and lines too vague to be of merit. Only the best of the lot remains for publication.

Without doubt, you'll find Schroeder's Antiques Price Guide the only one to buy for reliable information and values.
